

STRUCTURAL RESTORATION/SUSTAINABILITY— A CREATIVE ART

February 24, 2010

This full-day seminar will explore many aspects of existing structure evaluation and restoration, including the creative and sustainable sides of building rehabilitation. It will draw on experience learned from dozens of successful rehabilitation projects and also address the role of the SE as lead designer, preparing plans and specifications for permitting and construction.

The lead instructor will be William “Bill” Lavicka, S.E., President of Historic Boulevard Services. Bill is an IIT graduate, a civic leader in Chicago and a craftsman/developer who has restored countless architectural gems in the greater Chicago area. Often called a Master Builder, Bill will present information on the practical side of structural engineering, use of historic structural materials, sustainable reuse of buildings and materials, communications with other professionals, all while trying to get creative ideas constructed.

Bill will be assisted by Steve Elver, S.E., P.E., Principal at AECOM. Steve is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee who specializes in existing structure evaluation, rehabilitation design and reconstruction oversight. Steve’s experience includes existing building restoration and new structure constructability issues, as well as industrial and coastal structure rehabilitation. Steve will provide information on existing structure evaluation and testing, sources for historic structural component properties, differences between new and existing structure building code requirements, and generally offer counterpoints to Bill’s presentation. Class participation will be encouraged.

The course is intended for structural engineers, architects, contractors, developers and others interested in building restoration, structural rehabilitation and sustainability in the built environment. This course qualifies for 7.5 hours of continuing education credit, including AIA/CES credit. A continental breakfast will be served at 7:30 and lunch is included in the registration fee.
